“It’s Smart Business to Invest in Yourself at WCCCD!”

The Fall Semester brought new instructors with a wealth of experience to Wayne County Community College District, Corporate College. One such instructor, Dick Ruetz has brought experiential learning to the classroom for HVAC students. Mr. Ruetz has a wealth of experience in Heating, Ventilation and Air Conditioning and in addition has been an entrepreneur since 1989 owning RHAC, a heating and air conditioning company. He is teaching HVAC 109 and 110 at the Eastern Campus Corporate College. Using sheet metal that he donated to the students, he has taught them to develop metal fittings for duct work which is being made for an off-site project. He had this to say about his students: “My students are dedicated and enthusiastic about learning the craft of developing duct work out of sheet metal.”

Voted the “Hardest Working Work Study” in the Student Services Office at the Eastern Campus, Aaron Dickey has quickly learned the art of top-notch customer service. After spending several hours learning about processing for both new and returning students, he immediately adapted to demanding crowds during Summer registration all while receiving numerous compliments from both staff and students for his attention to customer service. According to Aaron, “... everyone likes to be given attention and likes to feel their situation is special”. Aaron is a second year student at WCCCD and has been employed at the Eastern campus since March, 2011. He is earning an Associates of General Studies degree.
